Sudan (Bradt Travel Guide Sudan)

Synopsis

Sudan is vast, ranging from desert lands in the north to tropical forest in the south. Its wildlife rivals eastern Africa and it is one of the most ethnically diverse countries in Africa. This is the only stand-alone guide on the market and delves deep into the country's past, bringing to life its cultural heritage and history. Improved infrastructure has made the archaeological riches of the Sudanese Nile more accessible; the marine wonders of the Red Sea remain one of the world's greatest diving sites.

Customer Reviews

Reviews of first edition—“Best and only dedicated guide to Sudan,” according to Wanderlust magazine. “It may seem a strange time to be publishing the first guide devoted entirely to Sudan, but hardy travelers have long been discovering the wonders of Africa’s largest country so this book is very welcome all the same. Despite the crisis in the currently inaccessible region of Darfur in the west of the country, the author optimistically includes it as well as creating a yearning to see the archaeological treasures of the ancient kingdom of Kush, explore the Imatong mountains, meet the bejeweled women of Kassala market and taste bush — a poor man’s alternative to a bean stew.” - The Observer

Sophie Ibbotson and Max Lovell-Hoare have worked extensively in Africa and Asia.

Plenty of good background info but some details have changed since publication. Will get you round the country OK. As usual with Bradt the street plans are poor and not as easy to use as lonely planet.

Item was as described.

Has good detail and was helpful covering a country without much available in print

It is so hard to find information on this turbulent area of the world that this is wonderful. Bradt is a known name in travel guides and my library is happy to have this book.

This is one of the worst and most incorrect travel books that is available about any country and that I encountered in decades of travelling and living in many countries around the globe. Too much 'information' is so wrong that it sometimes is even dangerous to rely on it, particularly in a country like Sudan. Where there is an established bridge the authors make you believe that one must take a ferry. Apparently not too much has been corrected or even newly researched for this third edition, when one compares it to edition 1 of a few years back. Information regarding how to reach sites frequently is so imprecise or missing at all that hardly anybody is ever able to locate a number of sites, instead the 'new' authors rely on taking a local ricksha or donkey cart to get you there. Certainly no traveller with his own vehicle will ever be able to locate a number of localities. Even some of the very few given GPS coordinates are not accurate. Several interesting locations are not mentioned at all. Road or track conditions are at times wrong or missing at all. Important accommodation facilities are unknown to that 'guide', which is inexcusable as Sudan doesn't have many possibilities anyway. Prices can't always be correct, so this is not criticised. It appears that the new authors probably have visited the museum in Khartoum and otherwise were quickly, if at all, driven by some sort of guide to a few common places only, without grasping very much of what goes on and where they really are. Save your money or at least be very careful when using that 'travel guide'. Regrettably there are not many choices, or no other choices, when it comes to Sudan. A traveller to Sudan most probably has more adventurous and explorative characteristics than usual and therefore should be prepared better to 'handle' that book, hopefully. Background: I live in Sudan and have just finished another 4-week self-drive tour with my own 4x4 across all of Sudan, including severe desert crossings and to a number of places and regions that are not even mentioned in that book. It would have been quite hair-raising and at times dangerous having had to rely on that book, although each and every part of that 'guide' was studied and verified when travelling and exploring. Note: that 4-week tour was done alone with my wife, no guide whatsoever, no other vehicle, and no guidance whatsoever from anybody or any tour operator and it was wonderful.

This guide book is poorly written. Most of the information is outdated before it was even published due to the rapidly changing situation in South Sudan and the present civil war. It is obvious that much of the information was obtained 2nd or even 3rd hand. Do not waste your money buying this book. I work in South Sudan and know this book will be of little value to the visitor to South Sudan.

I felt it was not well researched and thin on info, thus disappointed. Both the Sudans should have been included.-I've lost my enthusiasm for Bradt and cancelled my South Sudan order
