Theresa Dowell Blackinton is a Kentuckian, born and bred: Pure as bluegrass, Jim Beam bourbon, and horse racing on the first Saturday of May. She comes from a line of Kentuckians who can hardly recall a time when they were from anywhere else; and even when her address is elsewhere, she always finds her way back home for long stretches each year. Theresa has penned pieces for a variety of publications, including large magazines and newspapers such as National Geographic Traveler, the Boston Globe, and the Washington Post, as well as more regional publications such as the Frederick News Post, San Antonio Express-News, and Chesapeake Family News. She is also the author of Moon Take a Hike Washington, DC. Theresa lives in Durham, NC.

A rather simple light-weight introduction to the Bourbon Producing region in Central Kentucky. It does the job of introducing visitors to many of the locations on the Bourbon Trail, but the area is growing rapidly and many new additions are not included in this edition.
