British-born Adele Evans is a travel writer and broadcaster who fell in love with Italy at first sight at the age of 12. It was about 10 years later that she made her first trip to the little continent. Ortygia was where she had her 'Eureka' moment, entranced by the sublime melting pot of the Grecian with the Norman, Baroque and beyond with each wave of invaders adding to the cultural and culinary mix. The delight of savoring snow from Mt Etna with rose-water and jasmine just as the Arabs did when they invented ice cream, the fusion of flavors set against groves of citrus and olive trees and the perfumed nero d'avola wine draw her back time and time again. For her, this alluring, brooding, mesmerising meeting place of Africa and Europe is like nowhere else on earth. When not globetrotting, Adele returns as often as possible to all places Italian and writes for many national newspapers (from the Sunday Mirror to the Sunday Times), magazines and websites. She is also the author of several guidebooks, especially on Italy and France.

Book nicely organized and helpful in planning for our nine or ten day trip to Sicily. Useful map included for car or other travel included in pocket at rear of book. Easy to read and section organization by interest area (archeological, children friendly, etc.) was a unique feature. Well worth the price.

We actually used this guide because it was small, detailed, and helpful. It fit in my bag, or in my husbands backpack, and we left the bigger and heavier guide books at the hotel or in the car!

I bought this with the Frommer's Sicily guide. Having both is the way to go. The day by day is compact and I like the maps. Some of the hours for the museums are incorrect so definitely check before going.

Bought this for a trip I have in December. I keep it in the car to thumb through and it has a great layout. Love it!
